NOTES

DESCRIPTION

"A land to sweeten life, heir to a brilliant past, world capital of prehistory, province of 1,001 castles, stronghold of gastronomy and a 2,000-year-old winemaking tradition, promised land of cultural and nature tourism ..." These are all buzzwords from tourism catalogues and yet images that come to mind when thinking of the Périgord.

Because the Périgord really does cultivate a certain art of living. It is based above all on the excellent cuisine, the authenticity of the still preserved traditions and on the richness of culture and landscape. After Paris, the Dordogne is the department with the greatest density of historical monuments. And so, after Paris, it is also the most visited département in France. Around three million tourists come here every year. There are enough reasons for this, and it would be impossible to list them all. Perhaps one can simply say that the Périgord is a wonder of colours, charms and scenic diversity. With its natural beauties, its caves, its ancient rocks and areas, the Périgord undoubtedly deserves to be counted among the most beautiful tourist destinations of all.
