NOTES

DESCRIPTION

The former flour mill dating from the late 1800's is built of schist rubble with a traditional slate roof. Its facades feature rounded arched windows framed in brick and an oculus. It is flanked on either side by two small ground-floor buildings (former stables and a store room). Though the machinery has been removed (various parts are still on the property), the mill race is still in place and could offer the potential to generate hydroelectricity on site.

The fully renovated three bedroom house adjacent is built of the same materials and has been restored and modernised with a careful eye for preserving and highlight existing details, whilst sympathetically adding charm and character throughout through the use of lovely quality materials and finishes.

You enter into the house via a fully glazed internal porch with a direct view of the kitchen to the left through the glass wall. The kitchen is light and bright and features a sanded wood and stone floor, whitewashed stone walls, exposed beams and beautiful country style cabinets and worktop. Next to this is a small downstairs WC and utility area with space for a washing machine and additional storage.

On the other side of the entry is an equally luminous living room featuring the same whitewashed stone walls, real wood flooring, a stone hearth and a wood burning stove that gives both heat and an authentic ambiance.

Walking up the solid wood staircase there is a bright hallway with exposed beams...
